Q: How to print out boolean values in C++ Is there any command in C++ to print out the values of some boolean statements in console? For example: bool myb = false; I want to print out the value of "myb" in console, just like: if (myb = true) cout

Q: Keep track of whether or not a function was already called I am using a javascript library, where they have this: function DoSomething(arg1, arg2, arg3) { doSomethingElse(arg1, arg2, arg3); } However, when I try to use it, it will try to do doSomethingElse with the args I pass, no matter whether I have already called it, or not. Is there a way to tell the library to do nothing if it was already called? Thanks. A: No, you'll have to do a check before calling the function. if (doSomethingElse.call!== undefined) { doSomethingElse(arg1, arg2, arg3); } Q: Template members in derived class I have the following code, where A is a template class and B is a derived class. I want to make A able to print 82157476af
